

“From this new presence of the Risen Jesus living and working in the world, our vocation receives the impetus of faith, lasting hope and ardor of charity that must animate our contemplation and action rendering evangelical our journey in the world.

We are called to go out of our houses, without waiting for persons to come in search of us; we should go in search of them, to meet those to whom Jesus wants to reveal his face, to address his word. (...) Like Jesus, we must live and work in the world, but without being of the world. Strengthened by our consecration, we enter and work in the world , to follow Jesus because He wants this and in the way He wants this: therefore with joy, courage, charity drive, agility” (Luigia Tincani, 1945).
